Shelley Frost

Executive Director – Policy
Institution of Occupational Safety and Health (IOSH)

Shelley Frost leads IOSH's Policy division responsible for leading the strategic development of IOSH's policy, research and technical advice and guidance, building on IOSH's reputation as thought leaders in the health and safety arena internationally.

She oversees the departments managing policy and public affairs, strategic development, knowledge management, research and technical activities. The division works with key stakeholders to influence legislative frameworks and government policy as well as engaging business to promote the multiple benefits of good health and safety from strategy and positioning to knowledge management and engagement.

Prior to joining IOSH in 2015, Shelley was Director of Sustainability at Lafarge and led on environment, sustainable development, sustainable construction and external engagement at national and international level. Shelley is currently on the GRI Stakeholder Council and is a Board member of the Center for Safety and Health Sustainability. In 1998 she joined HSE spending much of her time post operational working on construction policy and regulation, including CDM and occupational health issues. She then became Director of Health and safety at the Construction Confederation.

IOSH is the world's largest membership organisation for health and safety professionals, with more than 45,000 members worldwide.
